

Primary Care For Your Newborn

In addition to getting comprehensive prenatal care during pregnancy, it is time to choose a pediatrician for when your child is born.

If you would like your child to be seen by a UCSF Health pediatrician or family physician, you'll need to make sure that your insurance provider covers primary care services at UCSF. Even if your insurance covers OBGYN services at UCSF, it may not cover primary care services, since OBGYN is considered a subspecialty service.

If your insurance does not cover primary care services at UCSF Health, you may receive a bill for services rendered at your newborn appointment.

After your baby is born and still in the hospital, you may be required to make an appointment for your baby within a few days of being discharged from the hospital. During this important appointment, the provider will check your baby's weight and feeding habits and screen for jaundice. If you plan to have your baby seen at UCSF Health Primary Care, the nursery will schedule an appointment at your preferred location.
